

Deputies, often firing the Deputies who had worked for the previous Marshal. Thus, the limitation on the Marshal's term of office frequently extended to the Deputies as well. Their primary function was to support the federal courts. The Marshals and their Deputies served subpoenas, summonses, writs, warrants and other process issued by the courts, made all the arrests and handled all the prisoners. They also disbursed the money. The Marshals paid the fees and expenses of the court clerks, U.S. Attorneys, jurors and witnesses. They rented the courtrooms and jail space and hired the bailiffs, criers, and janitors. In effect, they ensured that the courts functioned smoothly. Inspired by the rich history of the Marshals Service, Donald V. Crowley created the painting "Justice" as a tribute to the U.S. Marshals Service's 200th anniversary in 1989. © 1989 The Greenwich Workshop, Inc., Trumbull, CT 06611 Marshals took care of the details, thereby freeing the judges and attorneys to concentrate on the cases before them. They made sure the water pitchers were filled, the prisoners were
